Harvard Club Hosts Area Undergraduates During Winter Break

The Harvard Club of Southern California hosted numerous events for Harvard undergraduates and alumni during the Harvard winter break, which lasted from December 22, 2012 through January 27, 2013.

The largest event, Global Networking Night, attracted over 250 students, alumni, and guests to the Viceroy Hotel in Santa Monica for an evening of networking and fun at the bi-annual event. A wide range of professional fields were represented, offering attendees the opportunity to mix and mingle with fellow Harvardians who have chosen different professional paths. "Beyond the networking, there was a clear sense of unity and cheer in the air," said Mac Bartels AB '09, the event's organizer. "The success of the event was yet another example of how vibrant the Harvard community is in Southern California - over 3,000 miles from Cambridge!"

Fifty-seven undergraduates and alumni attended a winter break kick-off party at the Pacific Palisades home of Patric M. Verrone '81 and Maiya Williams Verrone '84 on January 8, 2013. HAA directors John Bowman AB '80, MBA '85 and Liz Ryan AB '81 attended as well as HCSC president Albert Chang, MD AB '63 and board member Ethel Seminario-Lackzo EdM '84. Two dozen of the undergraduates were participants in the Harvardwood 101 boot camp. Many had already scheduled Winternships in the entertainment industry.

"The Harvard Winternship program is developing into an invaluable way for undergraduates to advance their career prospects through the network of alumni who have an instant connection to them," said Verrone, the program's coordinator in Southern California. "There is no shortage of Harvard students who either live in Southern California or who want to settle here and who are anxious to meet with alumni in their workplaces and see what their professional lifestyles entail. In the years to come, more alumni will need to be engaged in the program to offer undergraduates these opportunities during the January recess.”

Another well-attended event welcoming all Early Action Admits to the Class of 2017 was held at the home of Josh Friedman AB '76 and Beth Friedman on January 13. Over 30 admitted students to the Class of 2017, and their parents, attended, and had an opportunity to interact and speak with current Harvard students and alumni. “The Friedman family were such generous and gracious hosts, and everybody had a great time,” said Schools Committee Vice President Dan Medina AB '79, MBA '83.

Boomer Canyon Hike on January 19, 2013

Several members as well as friends and family of the Harvard Club participated in a guided hike of Boomer Canyon on Saturday January 19, 2013. The guided tour was provided by Brian Hughes, an Interpretative Specialist for the Irvine Ranch Conservancy which is a non-profit, non-advocacy organization created to help care for 50,000 acres of permanently protected wildlands and parks on the historic Irvine Ranch.

During the three-mile hike, the group learned that the Irvine Ranch wildlands and parks is one of the five small areas of the world with Mediterranean climate zone and as the first California Natural Landmark by the State of California and the U.S. Department of the Interior, these lands are home to hundreds of species of plants and animals as well as rare species of birds, reptiles, amphibians and plants.

Additionally, the wildlands and parks have special ecosystems that are not only the most threatened in the world, but have been also identified as one the the world's biodiversity "hot spots," which means that it is an area with large concentrations of different species. The Irvine Ranch Conservancy maintains and cares for this area and provides many programs and events weekly and monthly for the community.

Overall, everyone enjoyed a beautiful day outdoors meeting new people and learning about nature. Some even enjoyed a tasty cactus pear during the hike.

Q&A from 02138...Zachary Wong

(These interviews will be a regular contribution to the HCSC Newsletter and will spotlight students enrolled at Harvard who are from Southern California)

Zachary Wong '16 was born in Santa Monica, CA and graduated from Concord Prep High School in Santa Monica, CA. In high school, he co-directed the school's production of Waiting for Godot and has been making short films starting in elementary school. In his freshman year at Harvard, he plays cello in the Harvard Radcliffe Orchestra. He also is an illustrator for Harvard College Stories for Orphans, a group that writes children's books for international orphanages each semester.

HCSC: What were some interesting classes that you took this past semester?

ZW: I had the pleasure of participating in a wide range of classes, ranging from Shakespearean Acting to Chamber Music Performance. One of the courses that I particularly enjoyed was on Asian American Literature. I remember on the first day of class during shopping week, Professor Ju-Yon Kim posed the question, "What defines a narrative as Asian American?" As the class progressed, our readings of Jhumpa Lahiri's beautifully crafted short stories and Charles Yu's meta-science-fiction-father-son novel redefined my answer to that question. They challenged my understanding of something I had previously taken for granted: my heritage and how it manifests in my own narrative.

The class challenged my prior understanding on the subject in that it taught me that the representation of Asian Americans in the Asian American canon has been multifarious. The poems and novels we read consider a diverse range of themes, from conflict with externally imposed expectation and stigmas to itinerancy and detachment from place. For example, I learned that each person's reactions to the racially specific casting instructions in Julia Cho's play "The Piano Teacher" or responses to the controversial "non-fiction" categorization of Maxine Hong Kingston's short story "Woman Warrior" were different and distinct.

Despite its brevity, this past semester has been a truly formative experience. In hindsight, it was extremely fortunate to have found these classes. Each one opened and broadened my perspective in ways that I think will influence my direction at Harvard. I look forward to the classes I will take in the semesters to come.

HCSC: What can you tell us about your fellow Harvard schoolmates?

ZW: It has been an incredibly humbling and inspiring experience meeting such passionate and talented people. And despite their impressive resumes and accolades, the students that I have met have been extremely modest and genial. Several students will surprise you when their secret lives as jazz pianists, computer programmers, athletes, and writers suddenly reveal themselves. The diversity in their interests has really encouraged me to keep an open mind and has introduced me to several fields I would never have otherwise encountered.

My roommate and I constantly challenge and encourage one another by playing music, watching films, and tossing around ideas on ways to represent sound and music through short films. What I find refreshing is the fact that among my friends, the interests we have are completely divergent. However, this supposed discordance results in some of the most insightful conversations I have had.

My classmates have introduced me to a wide range of interests, ranging from heavy metal drummers to computer science.

HCSC: What are your career aspirations?

ZW: I have always had a passion for screenwriting and directing and I hope to pursue them as a career. I have been interested in telling stories that express the struggles that hyphenated Americans have had to experience. To me, film and television are mediums that have seamlessly integrated into the framework of public perception. Because of that, they can have tremendous agency, shattering stigma, and bringing light to previously marginalized narratives. I have written and directed several short films in high school and have continued to write during my first semester at Harvard. However, during my time at Harvard, I would like to cast the net beyond filmmaking and open myself up to a broad variety of fields and perspectives. I believe that the experiences I have at Harvard will inform my craft in filmmaking.

HCSC: Finally, how can your alumni club assist you?

ZW: I think that the Harvard Club of Southern California already has been assisting me, providing a supportive and encouraging atmosphere for its members through networking events and community activities. Having a chance to speak with former alumni based in Southern California reminds you that the Harvard community extends beyond Cambridge, and that though the time you spend in college is brief, it can greatly affect the career you will have afterward. I have been lucky to meet such considerate and perceptive people within the Harvard Southern California community who generously have given me advice that they attained during their unique experiences at the school. The alumni club is a community that I only wish to grow closer to and one for which I am grateful.

Public Service Task Force Needs Volunteers

This April, Harvard's Global Month of Service will be celebrating its fifth anniversary! Last year, 230 Southern California alumni shared their time, energy and skills to volunteer with 27 local organizations, topping all other cities' participation! Fifty-three cities in all participated, offering 131 opportunities and garnering over 1000 volunteers worldwide. This year we hope to double our participation.

Organizer Liz Ryan clowns around at Peace4Kids

The generous and energetic alumni of the LA Public Service Task Force each coordinate volunteers to serve with their favorite local non-profit organization, and help host our Kick-Off and Wrap parties. Last year, events "sold out," with volunteers, representatives of participating local non-profits and friends comparing notes, networking, and just having fun. In the next several weeks, the "Task Force" will again be mobilizing. If you missed this last year, now's the time to get involved. Mark your calendars, this year's Kick-Off will be on March 21.

Do you sit on the board of a non-profit organization? Are you active with a favorite charity? How might they be able to use a team of people in April? Would you be interested in helping to organize our April offerings? The March Kick-Off? Please let us know. Contact Liz Ryan, Harvard Club of Southern California Public Service Coordinator and Harvard Alumni Association director from Los Angeles, at lryan.ryanworks@gmail.com, who again this year has kindly agreed to spearhead our efforts in Southern California.

Watch the Harvard Club website for news as it develops. <http://www.harvard-la.org>. Whether you're interested in helping the organizing effort, or in volunteering, we'd love to have you join us. With 15,500 alumni in Southern California, imagine what an impact we can have!

Monday, Jan 14th - Global Networking Night

On Monday, January 14th, over 250 Harvard graduates from across the University gathered at the Viceroy Hotel in Santa Monica for an evening of networking and fun at the bi-annual Global Networking Night. A wide range of professional fields were represented, offering attendees the opportunity to mix and mingle with fellow Harvardians who have chosen different professional paths. Beyond the networking, there was a clear sense of unity and cheer in the air. The success of the event was yet another example of how vibrant the Harvard community is in Southern California - over 3,000 miles from Cambridge! Please note that the next Global Networking Night will take place in June of this year. We look forward to seeing you then!
